Session Summary

COVID-19 spurred differentiated approaches to PrEP delivery;

How do we ensure HIV prevention is transformed for good?

1. Change is needed to make rapid progress towards global PrEP targets
2. Key lessons can be gleaned from differentiated ART delivery; similar client-centred, community-based approaches can be applied to PrEP
3. More options including telehealth, pharmacy and community-based delivery (in addition to facility-centered care) may make it easier for people to start and continue using PrEP
4. Emerging evidence from different regions, contexts and populations underscore that differentiated PrEP delivery is viable
5. Going forward, we must sustain and evaluate these new models and identify the programmatic elements which will be relevant for new HIV prevention products and technologies on the horizon
